TRULY ENGAGED

FOR THE FIRST TIME IN ITS HISTORY, TIFFANY & CO. INTRODUCES MEN'S ENGAGEMENT RINGS.

IT'S A NEW era at Tiffany & Co., which was acquired by the luxury goods company LVMH in January for $15.8 billion. The jeweler has just released its first collection of men's diamond engagement rings, embracing a cultural shift in how people express their love as well as a movement toward ungendered style.

In 1886 Tiffany founder Charles Lewis Tiffany introduced the diamond solitaire Tiffany Setting, a simple six-prong design that became the industry standard. Until now, the company's ring options for men were limited to wedding bands, some with a sprinkling of diamond accents, and a few other styles. The new Charles Tiffany Setting places sizable round-brilliant and emerald-cut diamonds—up to five carats—in bold platinum and titanium bands. The modern design evokes a signet ring, a style that will no doubt appeal to women as well as men. tiffany.com. —Jill Newman

PARTNERSHIP ON THE UPCYCLE

Few fashion items are as enduring as Levi Strauss & Co.'s original blue jean, trademarked in 1873. After 148 years, the durable pant, now known as the 501 style, remains an indispensable wardrobe staple. This month, as part of the ongoing Upcycled by Miu Miu project, the Italian fashion brand will release a capsule featuring Levi's men's 501s and trucker jackets from the 1980s and 1990s, retooled with Miu Miu's signature touch. The collaboration will be limited to 1,000 pieces in three silhouettes, hand-embellished with crystals, pearls, diamanté embroideries and leather intarsia. miumiui.com. —Jenny Hartman
